

My daughter, Olivia Ott, is a fun loving, silly and quite fashionable young lady who is in the second grade. Always having gotten ample attention since she was an infant primarily due to her rare hair color and equally pleasing demeanor, Olivia is no stranger to being the center of attention and generally thrives in it. Whether she's belting out her favorite country songs such as Reba McEntire's Fancy or Gabby Barrett's Glory Days, making mock toy opening videos with her various collectibles or playing with her friends or any animals, Olivia, with her contagious laugh, is always happy and ready for the next picture to be taken!

After having gone through Talent Auditions' classes, Olivia enjoyed her opportunity, however, feels that she would do currently do best in a commercial, modeling, voice over or other similar venture that doesn't require overly extensive, repeated time commitments at this point in her young life.

Being that this whole experience is new to all of us as a family, we don't know exactly what to expect but are eager to learn together. Thank you for your consideration!
